Nurse Clinicians  ● One third of all U.S. medical expenditures are spent on the treatment of women. The expectations of nurse clinicians are being shaped by changing patterns of healthcare delivery, the needs of consumers and significant advances in technology. Increasing public and private interest in nurse clinician roles in healthcare translates to practice as a coordinator of care and provider of patient-centered care. Nurse clinicians serve in a variety of functions and are engaged in diverse roles that include the curative phase of patient care as well as the prevention and wellness phases of health care. Nurse clinicians assume increasing responsibilities for performance improvement and safety in healthcare delivery. Nurse clinicians now are integral to quality and safety initiatives, as well as addressing patients' experience with care. How many nurse clinicians practice in the United States? Nurse clinicians (RNs and APRNs) are the largest percentage of primary care providers in the United States, as well as nearly half of all community health worker positions (Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality 2008). Nursing, from the time a child enters his or her first week of life to when he or she enters the adult health care system at age 65, is a significant indicator of long-term morbidity, mortality, and health care costs. Is the nurse clinician the answer to our healthcare challenges? Can the nurse clinician help us achieve health equity and reduce disparities in health care? Yes. Nurse clinicians provide care for underserved populations and can help to close access gaps between rural and urban residents, between whites and other racial and ethnic groups, between the insured and uninsured, and between the near-poor and poor. Can the nurse clinician bring dignity, respect, and quality care to patients? Yes. Nurse clinicians set the tone and culture of their practices and are accountable for the results of their treatment plans
