Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to a gas turbine engine, and more particularly to a method and apparatus for tuning a gas turbine engine using an acoustic wake. 2. Description of the Related Art Including Information Disclosed Under 37 CFR 1.97 and 1.98 A gas turbine engine typically includes a high pressure spool, a middle pressure spool, and a low pressure spool, with the high pressure spool being connected to the middle pressure spool by a high pressure turbine and with the middle pressure spool being connected to the low pressure spool by a low pressure turbine. The high pressure turbine is connected to the middle pressure turbine by a high pressure shaft, and the middle pressure turbine is connected to the low pressure turbine by a middle pressure shaft. A fan is connected to the low pressure spool by a low pressure shaft. Aircraft engines such as gas turbine engines are required to have a high level of precision and quality control to ensure that the engines perform within a specified range of performance over a design operating range. In particular, the engines must provide high levels of combustor stability over the entire design operating range. However, acoustic resonances in the combustors of the engines are known to degrade combustor stability when the engine is operated at or near a resonant frequency.
